Fractured Voices

Fractured Voices Theatre Company was founded by a collective of professionals with deep roots in the Family Law sector. We came together with one clear intention: to give voice to those whose stories often go unheard, misunderstood, or are simply too painful to tell in conventional ways.

We believe that feeling a story is more powerful than being told one. Our work doesn't rely on statistics or lectures — instead, we bring real-life challenges to the stage through Theatre in Education. This approach allows audiences to witness and emotionally engage with the personal experiences behind family legal issues. It is storytelling through performance, not presentation.

Each member of our company brings a wealth of experience from within Family Law and use this in their writing, devising and collaborative work. This professional grounding ensures that the themes we explore are handled with authenticity, sensitivity, and integrity. But when we step onto the stage, we become something else: performers, facilitators, and storytellers.

Following each performance, we may remain in character to answer questions from the audience, allowing people to interact directly with the narrative. Or we may allow members of the audience to contribute to the scripted scenarios and improvise around these in character. These elements and immersive methods open up space for reflection, learning, and deeper understanding.
